Answer

Freedom gives a person choices, while responsibility requires those choices to respect others and serve the common good.

1. A citizen should use freedom of speech truthfully and respectfully, rather than spreading hatred. Truth and non-violence were essential features of India's freedom struggle.
2. A student may choose how to use free time, but should also study sincerely and develop character. Education prepares young people to shoulder responsibilities towards the country.
3. A person should respect others' rights and cooperate with people from different communities. Mutual cooperation and unity help strengthen the foundations of freedom.

Using freedom responsibly protects it and makes it worthwhile for present and future generations.

Q5. 6 marks · Very long answer

Choose any two of Nelson Mandela, Mahatma Gandhi and Martin Luther King. Write a comparative study of their principles and lives, showing how they faced adversity and used non-violence to achieve their aims.

Answer

Nelson Mandela of South Africa and Martin Luther King Jr. of the United States opposed racial injustice and sought equal rights through determined leadership and non-violent action.

1. Mandela fought Apartheid, while King challenged racial segregation and discrimination in the United States. Both sought societies in which people would enjoy equal rights and dignity.
2. Mandela faced imprisonment for his opposition to Apartheid, spending 27 years in prison. King was repeatedly arrested and threatened for organising protests, including the Montgomery Bus Boycott.
3. King consistently advocated non-violent resistance inspired by Mahatma Gandhi. Mandela initially supported peaceful protest, but, after severe state repression, helped establish an armed resistance movement; he later pursued change through negotiation.
4. King's speeches and leadership helped mobilise people across racial and religious groups. Mandela's resilience and willingness to negotiate helped South Africans move towards democratic government.
5. King's work contributed to major civil-rights legislation, including the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Mandela became South Africa's first Black president in 1994, after the end of Apartheid.

Both leaders turned personal courage into movements for justice, although their methods developed differently in response to the conditions they faced.
